REAL LEADERS SERVE, NOT BULLY

It's great to see neighbors speaking up about toxic bullies like Paul Conte ("Conte Will Stop at Nothing," Letters, June 1). For too long, he's had an outsized influence in our community and is inhibiting real progress in Eugene, specifically the Jefferson Westside. We also need to call out the accomplices and enablers who cowardly support him, silently hiding behind their Conte-bulldog to maintain a do-gooder facade.

We need to call out such bully-trolls and expel them from our community forums if they refuse to change. Such patriarchal programming has no place in our communities and shared future.

We need servant leaders who can understand the changing needs of our communities and operate for the good of everyone. Servant leaders aren't concerned with retaining power, but achieving good faith representation for those they serve. They're curious, not reactionary. They don't want to maintain a status quo nor push their own agenda; they know evolution is necessary for community growth and creating prosperity for all. Servant leaders want to elevate their communities to their highest potential.

THANKS TO THAT HAPPENING GUY PAUL NEEVEL

I would like to thank Paul Neevel for his "Happening People" column (Eugene Weekly, May 25). He knows how to make a person sound more interesting than they really are. My sisters read the article and asked, "Who are they talking about? That's not the Lee I know." But thank you, Paul, for the great story about me.

I would also like to highlight two of the many other great organizations I volunteer for, Lane Senior Support Coalition, working with Aging and Disability Resource Connection in aiding low-income seniors with financial needs, and Suicide Prevention Coalition of Lane County, Suicide Prevention Training.

Thank you Eugene Weekly for highlighting these two great organizations.

DON'T STOOP TO PERSONAL ATTACKS

I once moderated a political debate forum. The number one rule was, and is, no personal attacks. I read the lengthy opinion penned by Anya Dobrowolski, Jesselyn Perkins, and Jacob and Matie Trewe (Letters, June 1). and I failed to discover any information, data or reasoned argument. It was simply an emotionally charged personal attack against Paul Conte.

I am not a friend, ally, or acquaintance of Conte, but I despair of fact-free personal attacks that leave no one better informed. It is a tactic I associate with right wing media. Shame on Eugene Weekly for using precious newspaper space for such dross.

Editor's Note: The letter in question was specific in its allegations against Conte, from Conte calling City Council candidate Barbie Walker "a whore" to anti-transit campaigns, and as such was not an ad hominem attack.

WHAT IF IT'S THE GAS STOVE?

I have always loved cooking with gas. Seven years ago I would have bought a gas stove if I'd had a gas connection. But, now, I have a grandson who seems to be perpetually sick. In his first two years, he has been in the ER more times than I can count. One day he's fine and the next day he can't breathe.

He was born in New England in December when all the windows are closed up tight. My son and daughter-in-law have a gas stove. When I've been to visit, I could smell the fumes. Never once did the doctor or nurse question them about their gas stove.

There is simply no data available on gas stoves in homes where people suffer from asthma. None. Is the natural gas industry so powerful that even to question its safety is prohibited? This shouldn't be a partisan issue. Wouldn't you want to know what's causing our children's health problems? What if it's the stove? I've read that getting a home tested is very difficult. Why is that?

TAKE BACK THE LEGISLATURE

Measure 113, overwhelmingly approved by voters last year, was touted as a way to prevent Republicans from shutting down the Legislature. It is obviously a total failure. More than that, because of its complexity and vagueness, the Republicans may litigate it all the way to the Supreme Court, where they may win.

This year it is time to do it right. We all need to urge any and all groups to form a coalition to submit another measure to the next ballot. This one will be simple. It will change the Constitution to make the quorum necessary to open a session a simple majority. Walkouts would no longer affect the Legislature's ability to function. Forty-six other states work this way — it's time for Oregon to join them.

Action, Demanded

ANNUAL 'WEAR ORANGE' EVENT IN SPRINGFIELD RECOGNIZED SURVIVORS OF AND LIVES TAKEN BY GUN VIOLENCE

By Brianna Murschel

Sounds of the flowing Willamette River splashed in the background as a sea of orange flooded Island Park in Springfield. The community joined Moms Demand Action on June 3 wearing shirts stating “Wear Orange” and “We Can End Gun Violence.”

The 100 or so participants wore orange, the color hunters wear to avoid getting shot, in honor of the more than 40,000 Americans killed by guns each year.

It was a conversation in a Facebook group about reducing gun violence the day after the Sandy Hook Elementary School tragedy in 2012 that sparked the largest grassroots movement in the country. Now known as Moms Demand Action, and with a chapter in every state, the organization has gained over 10 million supporters and has partnered with Everytown, the country's largest gun prevention organization.

On June 17, 2015, Dylann Roof murdered nine African Americans while they bowed their heads to pray in the Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston, South Carolina. This woke up Diane Peterson, a group leader of Moms Demand Action in Oregon, and she sprang into action.

She was “shocked at the violence and hate of that event,” Peterson says. “This problem was not going to go away, and, in fact, was getting worse. And that we needed to do something about it. And ‘we’ included me.”

In her hometown of Moneta, Virginia, two journalists were killed on live television in August 2015. “It was at this point that I realized the violence was not going to stop without our collective action,” Peterson says. “I wrote my first letter to my senators, and I joined Moms Demand Action in Eugene. Action was my antidote to despair.”

The sun shone upon 600 orange flags representing 600 lives in the U.S. lost to mass shootings in 2022 as the breeze wove between each remembered life. Peterson orchestrated the local “Wear Orange” event, with speakers standing before the community spreading awareness and personal experiences impacted by gun violence.

“We are the NRA’s worst nightmare,” Peterson told the crowd.

The gathering started with a land acknowledgment expressing a “shared space for everyone” in Lane County. Julie Lambert, a community member and emcee, then explained what “Wear Orange” stands for.

June 2 is National Gun Violence Awareness Day. “Wear Orange” events took place throughout the country around that day. Lambert told of how Hadiya Pendleton was shot and killed at the age of 15 a week after marching in President Barack Obama’s second inaugural parade. Pendleton’s friends commemorated her life by wearing the color orange.

Speakers included Oregon state Sen. James Manning, Eugene City Councilor Matt Keating, Lane County Commissioner Laurie Trieger, NAACP Eugene Springfield branch President Miles Pendleton, Everytown Network spokesperson McKay Sohlberg and Pacific Northwest Families Circle representative Barbara Kenny. A few others, including Springfield City Councilor Kori Rodley and mental health advocate and National Alliance on Mental Illness Lane County Board President Daniel Isaacson, who lost a friend to a police shooting, stood up and discussed gun violence prevention.

Rodley said her “blood was boiling” and “brain was screaming” when her kindergarten child told her about the active shooter drill they were practicing. Since the Columbine High School shooting in 1999, 380 school shootings have occurred and more than 352,000 students have experienced gun violence at school.

Police violence is one aspect of gun violence. Kenny lost her child, Stacy Kenny, on March 31, 2019, when Springfield police shot and killed Stacy after failing to de-escalate the situation. Kenny stood among friends, family and community members to tell her story and to represent other families who have experienced police injustice.

“For everyone that dies, they leave a family behind,” Kenny said.

Kenny and her family tabled for the Pacific Northwest Family Circle organization.

Behind the table, pictures of those lost from police violence hung on a poster. Barbara Kenny and her daughter, Kim Kenny, marked the names of the victims in hearts with different colored chalk on the sidewalk.

Other groups included Church Women United of Lane County, Community Rights Lane County, Transponder, SAfER (Springfield Alliance for Equity and Respect), Everytown Survivor Network, hope & safety alliance, SURJ (Showing Up for Racial Justice) and Cascade Health.

Anne Wright works with Cascade Health and was a student at Umpqua Community College during the 2015 shooting. “People moved on so quickly,” but it’s still current, and gun violence is a part of our health and well-being, she says.

May marked the 25th anniversary of the Thurston High School mass shooting in Springfield, which was commemorated at the June 3 event. News articles about the shooting were plastered on a poster with the date labeled above it and a table filled with more stories. The “Wear Orange” event also provided an Oregon Gun Violence Victims and Survivors Wall of Remembrance where participants could write an action they demand as well as honor victims and survivors. Someone wrote, “I demand gun safety legislation,” and another wrote, “I want my kids to be safe at school.” Others wrote about why they wear orange and who they are memorializing.

Singer and songwriter John Shipe serenaded the crowd with the country song “Broken Halos” and his own song, “Thoughts and Prayers.” Someone had reached out to him to sing this song for Moms Demand Action because it describes gun violence trauma taken to the limit. He picked his guitar. The crowd settled down as Shipe started to sing, “Send me your thoughts. Send me your prayers.” For about four minutes, all attention was set on him. A few shed tears and others held their loved ones close.

“We wanted this to be a community-wide event across Eugene and Springfield and surrounding areas, and we wanted diverse participation,” Peterson says. “Seeing the way this whole community came together to make this event happen has been really uplifting, energizing, inspiring, and it gives me that feeling of hope.” ■

Kudos to Joel Korin, a Eugene transplant from New Jersey, for his work picking the subjects and finding the speakers. It’s a considerable contribution to this community. ## THE STORY OF THE THREE-WAY PARTNERSHIP THAT BUILT A BASEBALL STADIUM IN SPRINGFIELD

BY KNIGHT JARECKI

You'll find a brand new state-of-the-art baseball park with 10-foot outfield walls, beautiful green turf and spacious in-ground dugouts at the northeast corner of Pioneer Parkway and Centennial Boulevard in Springfield. You'll also find the stadium with crisp blue seats and a capacity of almost 2,000 located at Hamlin Middle School.

In April 2021 Springfield Public Schools and Bushnell University — along with the Springfield Baseball Project, led by Ike Olsson of Olsson Electric and Kelly Richardson of Richardson Sports — announced a partnership that brought serious renovations of the public middle school baseball field over the past two years. They created a minor league park feel with concessions, souvenirs — and even beer — sold during the summers. The unique partnership also benefits Springfield youth through the integration of college baseball into the community, according to the group.

The three sides came together to give Bushnell University a new home for its relaunched baseball team after a 50-year hiatus. Springfield got a summer collegiate wood-bat baseball team known as the Springfield Drifters in the West Coast League (WCL), and Springfield High School acquired a brand new turf field.

So how exactly did a public school, a private university and a private group all reach an agreement to renovate a one-time dirt middle school field into one of the premier baseball facilities in the Pacific Northwest?

THE BACKSTORY

The story goes back to summer 2020. Olsson received a phone call from Kenny Niles, a longtime baseball coach in the Eugene/Springfield area who is currently the head coach for North Eugene High School and the Emerald Challengers of American Legion Baseball. Niles, an old friend of Olsson, asked him if he could sponsor a secondary legion team in the area when 60 kids came to tryouts hoping to play baseball after the pandemic had closed most athletic fields for the kids in the spring.

Olsson, who had helped support local youth sports for years, says he was happy to support the team, naming them the “Ole Athletics” after his athletic merchandise and equipment business that sells branded equipment and custom uniforms. The company also provides gear to kids who are unable to pay for their own equipment and supports Olsson’s Huddle Up by donating a portion of their sales to the nonprofit.

Olsson’s son Sam, a catcher at the University of Oregon at the time, agreed to coach the team with three other local baseball friends who were at home during the summer, after the pandemic shut down their college baseball seasons.

So during summer 2020, the Ole Athletics began competing against legion teams from around the state with Sam Olsson helping coach.

Niles was hosting an end-of-season team barbeque when he said to Olsson, “Man, we need a turf field in this town,” according to Olsson.

Most cities in the Pacific Northwest have public turf fields, which help teams play during the early spring, when tons of natural turf fields are unplayable due to the rain. Eugene/Springfield, unlike cities like Portland and Salem, did not have a youth turf field — a glaring hole for youth athletics in the community.

So Niles turned to Olsson and said, “Have you ever thought about looking into a WCL team?”

Olsson was intrigued by the idea of starting a WCL team. By creating a team he could start a local sports business venture and put a turf field in the community, both of which he was interested in. In order to do that, though, he would need a college to partner with him to help support the summer league team.

The WCL, which features 16 teams throughout the Pacific Northwest and Canada, is a wood-bat baseball league. Each year, college athletes from around the country are recruited to play during their summer offseasons in this league and develop through the use of wood bats, which are solely used in professional baseball. Many teams in the WCL have a university they partner with. For example, the nearby Corvallis Knights have a strong relationship with Oregon State University.

With the Emeralds already leasing PK Park, Olsson had to look elsewhere than UO, and Niles had the perfect partner — Bushnell University, a small private Christian university located right next to UO’s campus in Eugene.

Niles had previously coached Bushnell President Joe Womack’s son, Danny, at Churchill High School, and Danny even played for the Ole Athletics during the summer. So while they were at the barbeque, Niles called up Womack and introduced him to Olsson, sparking a mutual interest.

Bushnell, which for over a decade had explored starting a baseball program, was suffering a decline in attendance due to the pandemic. Womack says enrollment was “sketchy and concerning” during this time, and they felt that starting a baseball program could be a great enrollment initiative. “We’re an 800-student campus. If we go down 50 students, that legitimately makes a difference to what goes on on-campus. We went down 160,” Womack says. “There are now 45 baseball players. That is massive, especially when you have gone down a buck sixty.”

Womack adds, “They aren’t coming here if we don’t have a program.” He says, these are “35-45 new students we don’t have, that otherwise, we are not going to get.”

SELECTING HAMLIN MIDDLE SCHOOL

The two met for breakfast at the Eugene Country Club and discussed what it would take to get Bushnell a baseball program and Eugene/Springfield a WCL team. The first step would be to find space to build a stadium.

There is limited land in the south University District where Bushnell University’s campus is located, so the search went elsewhere in the community. This led them to the field at Hamlin Middle School, a location 4.1 miles from campus with two fields and space to build a stadium. The partnership with Springfield Public Schools came through Olsson, who had established an relationship with them through a previous multi-use turf sports field project at Maple Elementary through his Huddle Up foundation, a nonprofit Olsson set up to create new athletic facilities at low-income public schools in the community.

Each side had its own wants. Bushnell wanted a field that its players could use from September through the end of October and January to the first of May, while Olsson needed the field from June until August. Springfield Public Schools was interested in considering investments to improve its facilities that could mutually benefit its students and the community. “Would there be a way that would benefit all three?” — Bushnell, Springfield schools and the Springfield Baseball Project that would become Olsson’s Drifters — Womack asked.

At this point, Olsson began looking for business partners, starting with Kelly Richardson of Richardson Sports.

Richardson had always been Olsson's first call, according to Olsson. The pair had worked together on a variety of projects at Sheldon High School, including a covered stadium project in the mid-2000s and a renovated baseball facility in 2014.

Olsson met Richardson at Richardson's restaurant, North Fork Public House, for a beer in summer 2020, and said, "I'm thinking of doing this, and I'd like you to be my partner." Olsson says that Richardson responded by saying, "I'm in, but it's just you and me because if we get someone else in on it, then it will be a cluster."

So Olsson and Richardson were in business once again, this time with Bushnell University and Springfield Public Schools.

All the sides began crunching the numbers and the project came to a little under $5 million with in-kind investments. The group came to an agreement that Bushnell University would pay for the turf, costing a little over $1 million, Olsson and Richardson would pay for the stadium and dugout cost of $1.5 million and Springfield Public Schools would pay $1.4 million for a new scoreboard, team rooms and public restrooms, the latter two of which are shared by the nearby track and soccer field.

THE BEER BUMP IN THE ROAD

The biggest hurdle during the project was that Olsson and Richardson wanted to sell beer at Drifters games. "The big question mark was whether we could sell alcohol on the school property," Olsson says. "For us to be successful, we need to be able to sell alcohol."

At the time, Springfield Public Schools had a ban on alcoholic items on school property, but according to Olsson, the Springfield Public Schools own a camp near Fall Creek Lake and were hoping to change the rule to allow for exceptions so they could hold weddings at the camp and serve alcohol.

In October 2020, Springfield Public Schools voted 4-0 to revise the previous policy of alcohol consumption that prohibited alcohol on school property. The new policy states that "alcohol is prohibited except when specifically authorized by the superintendent in writing," which allowed the Drifters to receive a liquor license to sell beer during the summer when kids are not in school.

THE AGREEMENT

Approving alcohol sales was the final check mark of the project, as the agreement was soon finalized. In the agreement, Bushnell gets priority for use of the stadium September to October and January to May 1. Its contract is for 30 years, and it's reassessed every five years with the contract expiring on Dec. 31, 2051. Because of its contributions, the contractual agreement states Bushnell will not be required to pay for the use of the stadium for the first four years; however, starting in 2026, the university will begin paying an "appropriate rental fee for hours used in/on the premises during fall and spring seasons."

The Drifters, who were the largest beneficiaries of the project, similarly will not pay rent for the first four summers of baseball due to their investment in the stadium. After four years, a variable percentage of all the club's profits will be given to the school district. "The Drifters are going to be successful," Olsson says. "But the Drifters are also going to be great stewards to the community."

Springfield Public Schools owns the land and gets to use the new facilities when the other parties aren't using them, including the latter half of the high school baseball season. Springfield High School will also benefit by being able to play more early-season baseball games at the stadium because the playing surface is equipped for wet weather, and they get to use the field when Bushnell is not using it. The students at the school benefit, too, by having dedicated athletes play baseball at a high level on campus. "There are often times where the students are invited to attend games at no charge and enjoy the games," says Brett Yancey, the chief operating officer of Springfield School District.

THE EMS

The leasing of baseball field use with a university and public school in Lane County should sound familiar. For years, the Eugene Emeralds played at 4J School District's Civic Stadium.

In 2010, the Ems paid the University of Oregon $2 million to help build PK Park. The $2 million comes from a yearly rate of $200,000 the Emeralds paid upfront for the use of the field at PK during their current 20-year contract.

Although the contract runs through 2030, the Emeralds were elevated from Class-A short season to High-A full season in 2021, resulting in an overlap in seasons between the Oregon Ducks and the Emeralds due to the Ems' season start moving to April from mid-June. As a result, the Ems are now having to search for a new stadium before 2025 because of the struggles caused by two teams sharing the same facility in April and May. This week, the Emeralds were forced to forfeit multiple weekend home games and play on the road in Pasco, Washington, due to Oregon baseball hosting a NCAA Super Regional at PK Park and the Ducks having priority use of the field. That problem is avoided at Hamlin Sports Complex because Bushnell's season ends more than a month before the Drifters' begins.

Currently, the Emeralds are in a situation where visiting teams are forced to set up near Autzen Stadium in portable trailers with rented lockers inside for their players and coaches because of the conflicting schedules with UO. Umpires are required to walk downstairs inside Autzen Stadium with additional showers and bathrooms located downstairs for female coaches such as Hillsboro Hops Manager Ronnie Gajownik.

Teams also can't use the field until 6 pm because of the Ducks' practice schedule most days, which means Emeralds games have to start at 7:35 pm, causing low attendance. "7:35 start times are late for kids and families on school nights," Eugene Emeralds General Manager Allan Benavides says.

With the MLB requiring the Emeralds to build a new stadium by 2025, the Ems have been exploring the possibility of building a new stadium at the Lane County Events Center, which Benavides describes as a similar project to what the Springfield Baseball Project did — but on steroids. The total cost for the Emeralds' new stadium is "double the $45 to 50 million that we expected," according to Benavides, but also features a similar community-first vision that he hopes allows more events, concerts and high school baseball games to take place at the new stadium outside of Ems' games.

The Emeralds look to chip in $13 million and use county, state and federal money to help fund the project. They hope to have the funds secured in the next eight months to build the stadium by 2025 and keep minor league baseball in Eugene, which has existed in the Emerald City since 1955.

COMMUNITY INTEGRATION

Ike Olsson's vision for the Drifters going forward is to continue to build something exciting and positive in the community. "We want to be the place where a family of four can pay $6 for a ticket, $5 to $6 for a beer, and $2 to $3 for a hot dog," he says.

Womack said multiple times that Olsson was "undoubtedly the hero" of the project. "If Ike isn't Ike and doesn't use the blessings that he and his family have received and have an honest desire to bless the community around them, then this doesn't happen," Womack says.

Two years after its start, the stadium has finally been built, with all the team rooms and facilities completed. "They were riveting during the games last season," says Corey Anderson, Bushnell's athletic director.

The field is used throughout the year with local youth baseball camps being held when Bushnell and the Drifters aren't using the field. "I'd literally rather have it this way than owning my own stadium," Womack says. "It's an efficient economic use of field, but also we are integrated with the community."

By being integrated into the community, youth in Springfield are able to benefit from the new facilities and have a great influence in collegiate baseball to look up to. "The kids in Springfield and this community could be exposed to what it could be for you if you stay in school and do all the positive things," Olsson says.

"Springfield loves us being there," says Bushnell's Anderson. "During the games, when you have recess, all the kids are there screaming, 'Let's go Beacons!' It gives our kids the ability to be really good mentors for those kids over there."

The community also benefits from another baseball team in the region. With the Drifters in Springfield, and the Emeralds in Eugene, there are baseball games in Eugene/Springfield 60 out of the 120 days between June and August, allowing for fans to be able to catch a game most days of the summer.

FUTURE PLANS

In the future, Olsson and Richardson will have the naming rights for the stadium complex, while Bushnell University will have the naming rights for the field. At the end of December 2026, the first five-year-reassessment of the 30-year contract will take place with Bushnell and Springfield Public Schools coming together to adjust the contract.

Bushnell wrapped up its program's second season at the end of April, finishing 23-25, an improvement from last season's 11-37 finish. Several Bushnell road games at Oregon Tech in Klamath Falls and Corban in Keizer were moved to Hamlin Sports Complex this spring due to the field's ability to be played in inclement weather, a trend that looks to continue in the future.

The Springfield Drifters kicked off their season on June 2 sweeping the Port Angeles Lefties. The Drifters look to improve after a 17-37 finish in their inaugural season. You can find a full list of their schedule at DriftersBaseball.com. ①

The stadium is at 326 Centennial Boulevard in Springfield. To view Bushnell's baseball schedule go to BushnellBeacons.com/sports/baseball/schedule/2023. For information on the Springfield Drifters, check out DriftersBaseball.com.

For that moment when you absolutely need your lunch break downtown to be outdoors and surrounded by cultural experiences, Artistic Encounters at Kesey Square is the place to be. Three days a week there is folk, bluegrass and other music filling the air as well as other cultural performances allowing you to relieve the stress of the workday. Artistic Encounters is a partnership between Harmonic Laboratory of Eugene and the city of Eugene Cultural Services. Harmonic Laboratory — an arts collective founded in 2010 whose artists today are Jeremy Schropp, John Park and Jon Bellona — brings in the artists. Schropp notes that it’s primarily music the past two years, but National Dance Week had a turn in April, and other cultural performances could be on the schedule. Artistic Encounters was a workhorse event through the pandemic, Schropp says. Because it is an outdoor venue, the show went on three days a week with proper social distancing, and the artists were all paid. “The artists were quite thankful for that,” Schropp says. In the fiscal year ending June 2022, Schropp adds that 270 artists — lead and backup musicians — performed at Artistic Encounters and were each paid $100.

Artistic Encounters, presented by Harmonic Laboratory and the city of Eugene Cultural Services, is noon to 1 pm every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday until the end of September at Kesey Square on the corner of Broadway and Willamette Street. FREE. Information about Harmonic Laboratory and its work in Eugene is at HarmonicLab.org. — Dan Buckwalter

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON'S GOSPEL CHOIR
CELEBRATES ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY WITH A CONCERT AT BEALL CONCERT HALL

By Brianna Murschel

On a rainy day in Eugene, music enthusiasts in a single file line await finding their seats. Choir classroom 163 soon fills with the sounds of melody, soul and spirit known as gospel music — all in preparation for the upcoming 40th-anniversary show at Beall Concert Hall on June 11.

The University of Oregon's gospel vocal ensembles consist of Gospel Choir, a large beginners choir; Gospel Ensemble, a smaller intermediate choir, and Gospel Singers, an advanced highly skilled choir. Anyone can join the three groups, though the Gospel Ensemble and Singers both require auditions. Student status at the UO is not necessary, nor is it necessary to major or minor in music to participate.

Each choir will showcase its talent and knowledge from the last term or so at the 40th-anniversary show. Andiel Brown, director of UO's gospel choirs and ensembles, says the concert acts as their final for the class. For Gospel Choir and Gospel Ensemble it can be taken as a class each term, Gospel Singers is typically a year-long commitment.

Brown stands at the head of the classroom instructing his students to repeat after him and motions them to step and sway from side to side. "I teach them their parts, verse-by-verse, section-by-section," he says. "You don't have to learn how to read music in this class because we do it very traditionally."

Gospel developed as an early traditional genre of Christian music throughout the U.S. It was created by African American slaves who could not read or write music but could transmit their knowledge through listening and repeating melodies. Over the years, gospel has made its way to churches, record labels, radio stations and more.

The 1938 jazz-gospel song "When the Saints Go Marching In," made famous by Louis Armstrong, consists of lyrics inspired by the Bible's Book of Revelation.

"Music is history. It's culture. It is the sentiment of people. It's a legacy," Brown says. "It was created by my ancestors. It was created as a way to give hope, to connect, to give instruction."

Brown then reaches a higher tone and begins to sing "Wade in the Water" by Ramsey Lewis as an example of including historical meaning and emotion. "That song was literally giving instructions on how to get free from slavery," he says.

Popular songs through the years, including "Man in the Mirror" by Michael Jackson, will be sung by the choirs on the night of the big show. Duck fans will recognize another well-known song, but Brown is waiting for the unveiling. Each choir will perform separately but will converge for some performances. Brown has implemented dance choreography for the groups, and he will also perform alongside them. Some of Brown's students from the Cuban salsa class he teaches at Bushnell University will also perform.

"It's just a really good positive environment for anyone, especially if people are going through a depression or anything like mental health issues or any kind of issues in life," Christina Stubbs, a member of Gospel Singers, says over the phone. "I always highly recommend either joining or, you know, just going to a concert, and it will literally just uplift anyone."

Since 2019, Stubbs, 31, has taken part in the gospel program. She is not registered as a UO student, but really she has been a part of it for decades. Her grandmother and aunt were a part of the gospel choirs. Music runs in Stubbs's family, and she carries it on. Her father used to play the piano for Brown.

She grew up in a musical family and joined choirs in elementary, middle and high school. She has sung sounds anywhere from classical to opera and gospel. "It's a huge part of my life. And I just consider it a passion of mine. It's something I have to do. It keeps me happy," Stubbs says. "I look forward to it every day, especially when I go to my choir rehearsals."

During the class, Brown tallies those who wish to audition for a solo in the upcoming show and marks what song they prepare to sing. The room is quiet only for a moment, then the playing of a piano begins, and the rehearsing goes on.

"The music will take you on a journey, and cause you to deal with some things that you're going through in your life," Brown says. "That's the nature of music — the nature specifically of gospel music." ■

Beall Concert Hall hosts UO Gospel Choir Concert June 11 at 5 pm. Tickets are available in person at UO Ticket Office, online at tickets.uoregon.edu or by phone at 541-346-4363.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): “Everything that irritates us about others can lead us to an understanding of ourselves,” said psychologist Carl Jung. What was he implying? That we may sometimes engage in the same behavior that bothers us about others? And we should examine whether we are similarly annoying? That’s one possible explanation, and I encourage you to meditate on it. Here’s a second theory: When people irritate us, it may signify that we are at risk of being hurt or violated by them — and we should take measures to protect ourselves. Maybe there are other theories you could come up with, as well, Aries. Now here’s your assignment: Identify two people who irritate you. What lessons or blessings could you garner from your relationships with them?

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): In 1886, a wealthy woman named Sarah Winchester moved into a two-story, eight-room farmhouse in San Jose, California. She was an amateur architect. During the next 20 years, she oversaw continuous reconstruction of her property, adding new elements and revising existing structures. At one point, the house had 500 rooms. Her workers built and then tore down a seven-story tower on 16 occasions. When she died at age 83, her beloved domicile had 2,000 doors, 10,000 windows, 47 stairways and six kitchens. While Sarah Winchester was extreme in her devotion to endless transformation, I do recommend a more measured version of her strategy for you — especially in the coming months. Continual creative growth and rearrangement will be healthy and fun!

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): “All the things I wanted to do and didn’t do took so long. It was years of not doing.” So writes Gemini poet Lee Upton in her book Undid in the Land of Undone. Most of us could make a similar statement. But I have good news for you, Gemini. I suspect that during the rest of 2023, you will find the willpower and the means to finally accomplish intentions that have been long postponed or unfeasible. I’m excited for you! To prepare the way, decide which two undone things you would most love to dive into and complete.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): Cancerian author Denis Johnson had a rough life in his 20s. He was addicted to drugs and alcohol. Years later, he wrote a poem expressing gratitude to the people who didn’t abandon him. “You saw me when I was invisible,” he wrote, “you spoke to me when I was deaf, you thanked me when I was a secret.” Now would be an excellent time for you to deliver similar appreciation to those who have steadfastly beheld and supported your beauty when you were going through hard times.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Don’t make a wish upon a star. Instead, make a wish upon a scar. By that I mean, visualize in vivid detail how you might summon dormant reserves of ingenuity to heal one of your wounds. Come up with a brilliant plan to at least partially heal the wound. And then use that same creative energy to launch a new dream or relaunch a stalled old dream. In other words, Leo, figure out how to turn a liability into an asset. Capitalize on a loss to engender a gain. Convert sadness into power and disappointment into joy.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): At age nine, I was distraught when my parents told me we were moving away from the small town in Michigan where I had grown up. I felt devastated to lose the wonderful friends I had made and leave the land I loved. But in retrospect, I am glad I got uprooted. It was the beginning of a new destiny that taught me how to thrive on change. It was my introduction to the pleasures of knowing a wide variety of people from many different backgrounds. I bring this to your attention, Virgo, because I think the next 12 months will be full of comparable opportunities for you. You don’t have to relocate to take advantage, of course. There are numerous ways to expand and diversify your world. Your homework right now is to identify three.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): Most of us continuously absorb information that is of little or questionable value. We are awash in an endless tsunami of trivia and babble. But in accordance with current astrological omens, I invite you to remove yourself from this blather as much as possible during the next three weeks. Focus on exposing yourself to fine thinkers, deep feelers and exquisite art and music. Nurture yourself with the wit and wisdom of compassionate geniuses and brilliant servants of the greater good. Treat yourself to a break from the blah-blah-blah and immerse yourself in the smartest joie de vivre you can find.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): Over 25 countries have created coats of arms that feature an eagle. Why is that? Maybe it’s because the Roman Empire, the foundation of so much culture in the Western world, regarded the eagle as the ruler of the skies. It’s a symbol of courage, strength and alertness. When associated with people, it also denotes high spirits, ingenuity and sharp wits. In astrology, the eagle is the emblem of the ripe Scorpio: someone who bravely transmutes suffering and strives to develop a sublimely soulful perspective. With these thoughts in mind, and in accordance with current astrological omens, I invite you Scorpions to draw extra intense influence from your eagle-like aspects in the coming weeks.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): “When I paint, my goal is to show what I found, not what I was looking for.” So said artist Pablo Picasso. I recommend you adopt some version of that as your motto in the coming weeks. Yours could be, “When I make love, my goal is to rejoice in what I find, not what I am looking for.” Or perhaps, “When I do the work I care about, my goal is to celebrate what I find, not what I am looking for.” Or maybe, “When I decide to transform myself, my goal is to be alert for what I find, not what I am looking for.”

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): Vincent van Gogh painted Wheatfield with a Reaper, showing a man harvesting lush yellow grain under a glowing sun. Van Gogh said the figure was “fighting like the devil in the midst of the heat to get to the end of his task.” And yet, this was also true: “The sun was flooding everything with a light of pure gold.” I see your life in the coming weeks as resonating with this scene, Capricorn. Though you may grapple with challenging tasks, you will be surrounded by beauty and vitality.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): I suspect that your homing signals will be extra strong and clear during the next 12 months. Everywhere you go, in everything you do, you will receive clues about where you truly belong and how to fully inhabit the situations where you truly belong. From all directions, life will offer you revelations about how to love yourself for who you are and be at peace with your destiny. Start tuning in immediately, dear Aquarius. The hints are already trickling in.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): The renowned Mexican painter Diego Rivera (1886–1957) told this story about himself: When he was born, he was so frail and ill that the midwife gave up on him, casting him into a bucket of dung. Rivera’s grandmother would not accept the situation so easily, however. She caught and killed some pigeons and wrapped her newborn grandson in the birds’ guts. The seemingly crazy fix worked. Rivera survived and lived for many decades, creating an epic body of artistic work. I bring this wild tale to your attention, Pisces, with the hope that it will inspire you to keep going and be persistent in the face of a problematic beginning or challenging birth pang. Don’t give up!

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm a solo polyamorous hetero-romantic pansexual cisgendered man. My serious romantic relationships have all been with cis women, but most of my sex partners are men. Since I bottom when I am with men, most people think I must be closeted or suffer from "internalized homophobia." This has caused tension with the women I date, ranging anywhere from women not wanting to be with me because they think I am "living a lie" to a recent situation where I was repeatedly "outed" by a bi female poly partner who told people (friends, random gay men) that I was "into guys" and "bi."

I asked her many times to stop, explaining that while those labels may be accurate when I'm in a kink club or my doctor's office, it is up to me to decide when to use them and with whom. And because I am hetero-romantic, I do not identify as pan or bi outside of those specific places. I think "LGBTQ" labels identify who one loves, whereas to me it is simply a description of the types of sex I enjoy. I had to end things with this woman over this and when I explained why she never admitted to doing anything wrong. While a part of me wants to just not tell women I date about my other partners, I know I can't since my having sex with men who also have sex with men has health implications for my female partners. How do I convince women that disclosing my sexual preferences without my consent is wrong? How can men like me maintain our sexual privacy while responsibly disclosing relevant information to sex partners?

— Pissed About Non-Necessary Erotic Disclosures

The first sentence of your letter is the most LGBTQ shit I've ever read in my life.

I mean, anyone who needs seven words with roots in Latin, Greek and Tumblr — clocking in at 20 syllables — to describe his sexual identity and romantic orientation is a lot of things, PANNED, but straight (single syllable!) isn't one of them.

Which is not to say the people you privately come out to as pan — the women you date — have a right to tell friends and/or random gay men that you're into guys (which you are) or that you're bi (which you aren't, although lay people often use "bi" and "pan" interchangeably). If the fact that you get fucked by men is something you wanna keep private... as private as you can keep something you're doing in public sex environments (kink clubs)... your preferred sex partners (male) and preferred romantic partners (female) should respect your wishes and keep that shit private.

Sadly, PANNED, figuring out who can be trusted with something a partner has a right to know but that we would prefer kept private isn't easy or obvious. All too often we only learn someone can't be trusted after they've violated our trust. On the flipside, demanding absolute secrecy about an important part of a relationship — telling our partners they can't confide in friends they feel they can trust (and might later learn they can't) — isn't reasonable or fair. Your right to privacy isn't absolute, PANNED; your right to privacy has to be balanced against the needs of the women you date to seek advice, perspective, and bullshit detection from their (hopefully) trustworthy friends.

Zooming back in on your sexual identity and romantic orientation... maybe I'm not being fair. You didn't claim to be straight, PANNED, you only claimed not to identify as pan or bi outside of kink clubs and doctors' offices.

Still, denying that you're queer because you don't fall in love with men — you're not like the other girls — is a weird flex for someone who identifies as pansexual, PANNED, and it's difficult to see what besides internalized homophobia and/or biphobia would motivate such a flexy denial. If you don't want people who aren't currently dicking you down and/or taking a rectal swab to think you're queer, well, that's your business. Just as some kinky people prefer to be perceived as vanilla, and some non-monogamous people prefer to be perceived as monogamous, some bi/pan people prefer to be perceived as straight. People are assumed to be straight, vanilla, and monogamous unless they speak up (or unless their loose-lipped girlfriends speak up), and if you're comfortable with those assumptions — if you're comfortable benefiting from those assumptions — no one can force you to identify as LGBTQ when you aren't getting your ass fucked or swabbed.

But kinky people can't claim they're actually vanilla because they only get whipped on Mondays, and people who are non-monogamous can't claim they're actually monogamous because they only fuck other people on MDMA — and you can't claim to be something other than LGBTQ on a technicality like, "I only do queer shit with people I could never love." You can't embrace the LGBTQ label when it's convenient (taking loads in kink clubs) and deny being LGBTQ when it's not (on dates with women).

Actually, you can do that — that is, in fact, exactly what you have been doing. But you shouldn't do that, PANNED, not right now, and not anymore. These are perilous times for LGBTQ people, as anyone who's been paying attention to the news knows. Anti-gay, anti-trans and anti-drag laws are being passed all over the country, books are being banned, Pride events are being met with increased menacing protests. LGBTQ people are under siege, PANNED, and the people attacking queer people aren't going to spare the hetero-romantic queers.

So, while I'm sure everyone loves seeing your queer ass in the kink clubs, PANNED, we're going to need your queer ass on the barricades, too.

My boyfriend and I have struggled to connect sexually more or less since the beginning of our long-distance relationship more than a year and a half ago. First the issue seemed to be condoms, which he couldn't stand, but now that I've gotten an IUD his desire for sex has completely plummeted and I spend my nights reading through r/deadbedrooms subreddit posts. He says, "this usually happens" to him after about a year, but he wants to stay together and work through it. But in all honesty, he seems unbothered by the lack of sex. I started snooping — I am aware that is super problematic and something I need to work on — and learned he had recently watched porn featuring exclusively Asian women and then found out he has been contacting random Chinese women via a social platform and asking to meet IRL so he could "learn more about Chinese language, culture, and food." This just seems so off. I'm not anti-porn and I understand we all have types, but I'm weirded out by the possible fetishization and lack of transparency on his end. Big red flag?

— Perplexed And Sadly Sexless

That red flag is so big you can't see the other red flags behind it. You've wasted a year and a half on this guy, PASS, and you shouldn't waste another minute on him. And if it took a little snooping for you to figure that out — if it took snooping for you to see that your boyfriend has been lying to you from the start and that he was prepared to tell you (and other women) bigger and worse lies — you don't have to waste any time feeling bad about the snooping.
